Rollin' Moses got his name from the rolling wake he would leave when he crested in the many years he was seen in Blake's Cove on Eagle Lake. Locals claim that Rollin' Moses was responsible for keeping the cove he called home completely void of ducks and waterfowl. Others claim over-hunting by the local duck hunting club was to blame, but regardless, the large cut-in off Eagle Lake was rarely visited by top-water birds. Rollin' Moses had not been seen for five or more years until he was snagged by a 14-year-old boy who was fishing the cove with his father and grandfather in 1985.
